

We've commented before about these maps produced by Mike Harris of today's London Transport network presented in the style of maps used up to the 1970s. The density of the network does make the cartography very congested but they are rather fun and have one advantage over the modern ones; they show other operators' routes on the fringes. With every map bought this year a donation is made to the Hope for Tomorrow national cancer charity, a very worthwhile cause.
